Report of FYUGP – Online Orientation Class for College Teachers on 28-06-2024

The online orientation class aimed to familiarize teachers with the details and structure of the Four Year Undergraduate Programme (FYUGP). It provided an overview of the program's objectives, curriculum, and expected outcomes to ensure educators are well-prepared to guide students effectively.

Dr. Bindhu provided a comprehensive introduction to the FYUGP, emphasizing its four-year duration and the rationale behind its implementation. Detailed insights were provided into the curriculum framework, including core subjects, elective choices, and interdisciplinary opportunities. The emphasis was on offering a holistic educational experience to students. The orientation covered effective pedagogical approaches suitable for the FYUGP, focusing on interactive and collaborative learning methodologies to enhance student engagement and critical thinking. Dr. Bindhu discussed assessment strategies tailored for the FYUGP, highlighting continuous evaluation methods and assessments designed to measure both knowledge acquisition and skill development. The new system will indeed restructure the teacher's role and as a result teachers will have to shift from monologues to more interactive session with the students. Though challenging, the new scheme will definitely inspire students for self-learning strategies as they can enjoy the added benefit of skill enhancement programme as well. This programme can encourage research aptitude in students from degree level itself. The orientation put an end to the eternal questions on workload as the Minister promised that every permanent teacher's workload and job space will be protected. The Minister's talk was followed by two sessions delivered by dignitaries from the reform cell who discussed the technical aspects of the Four-Year Degree Programme. Credit, Course and changes in evaluation methods. The testing assessments included Knowledge, Skill and Aptitude testing for the students. The orientation sessions emphasised that teachers will have a solid autonomy to fix assessment tools and to engage classes in their choice of academic framework. Information on support systems available to both students and faculty, such as academic counseling, mentorship programs, and resources for professional development, was also provided. The session concluded with a question and answer segment, allowing teachers to clarify doubts and seek further information on specific aspects of the FYUGP. The online orientation class conducted by Dr. Bindhu was instrumental in equipping teachers with the necessary knowledge and resources to effectively contribute to the Four Year Undergraduate Programme. It fostered a collaborative environment and ensured that educators are well-prepared to deliver quality education aligned with the program's objectives. This orientation marks a crucial step in the successful implementation of FYUGP, aiming to provide students with a robust educational experience conducive to their holistic development. All the faculty members at SN College, Chengannur attended the Online Orientation session in the College Auditorium under the leadership of Principal-in-charge, Dr. Anju K.S from 2:00 pm-4:00 pm.
